Mission Statement

The mission of the South Carolina African American Heritage Commission is to identify and promote the preservation of African American historic sites, structures, buildings, and culture of the African American experience in South Carolina, and to assist and enhance the efforts of the South Carolina Department of Archives and History.

South Carolina Celebrates Icons in the Humanities

Dr. Barbara Jenkins receives the 2020 Governor’s Award

Established in 1991, the Governor’s Awards in the Humanities recognize outstanding achievement in humanities research, teaching, scholarship; institutional support for communities in South Carolina better understand our cultural heritage or ideas and issues related to the humanities; excellence defining South Carolina’s cultural life to the nation or world; and exemplary support for public humanities programs.

Dr. Barbara Jenkins, a charter member of the South Carolina African American Heritage Commission, was among the four recipients of this prestigious award during a virtual ceremony on October 22nd. Dr. Jenkins was honored for her lengthy career as a librarian and former Dean at South Carolina State University and her role as a champion of African American historic preservation in Orangeburg and statewide, efforts which ranged from identifying key sites, hosting preservation workshops, and collaborating with local stakeholders to erect state historical markers and establish historic districts.

Her fellow recipients included Beaufort Mayor Billy Keyserling, Historic Columbia executive director Robin Waites and Francis Marion University professor Jon Tuttle.
On July 23rd, the South Carolina African American Heritage Commission and Columbia S.C. 63 honored Bishop Frederick Calhoun James, legendary minister and civil rights leader, with the Leon A. Love Lifetime Achievement Award during a socially distanced ceremony at his home in Columbia.

Born in Prosperity, S.C., Bishop James received his bachelor’s degree from Allen University and got his master’s of divinity at the Howard University School of Religion. He has ministered in Winnsboro, Columbia, Sumter, and countless other cities worldwide.

In addition to being a renowned minister, Bishop James was a prominent civil rights organizer during the 1960s movement.

He spearheaded the Sumter Movement, a nonviolent direct action and political organizing campaign that toppled Jim Crow segregation in the Midlands city.

Bishop James also worked closely with civil rights leaders Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and John Lewis. He was among the dignitaries present in the Capitol Rotunda during the signing of the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

The now 98-year-old minister continued his religious and political work in later decades. Under his leadership, Allen University reached new heights during the 1980s. He also served on the White House advisory board during the Clinton administration.

In 2003, he received the state’s highest award, The Order of the Palmetto, for his lifelong commitment to improving the lives of citizens in our state.

Since its inception in May 1993, the South Carolina African American Heritage Commission (SCAAHC) has benefited from the work of historians, preservationists, cultural interpreters, and a host of passionate community activists interested in documenting and preserving our state’s rich African American history and culture.

The SCAAHC is comprised of fifteen commissioners representing each congressional district and a host of ex-officio members, all of whom were chosen due to their excellence in their chosen professions. All are first among equals but this new section in Call & Response will allow readers to learn a bit more about each commissioner and the communities they serve.

Taking “Center Stage” today is Victoria A. Smalls, a dynamic and talented historian, educator, and cultural interpreter who has worked for the forthcoming International African American Museum and historic Penn Center on St. Helena Island.

A native of St. Helena Island and 1988 graduate of Beaufort High School, Victoria Smalls has spent her career documenting and sharing the often overlooked history of African Americans within the broader Gullah-Geechee Heritage Corridor, which includes sections of the South Carolina Lowcountry, Georgia, Florida, and North Carolina.

“It’s history. It’s been buried so long, I just had to share it,” Smalls shared in a 2018 profile. “It’s going to make us more critical thinkers, more active in what’s going on today in our daily lives.” Few have a better understanding of history’s relevance than Smalls, whose research on Penn Center shed new light on her own family’s story. Her late father, Elting Smalls, graduated from the Penn School in 1943, further strengthening her connection to the historic school and cultural center, the beating heart of Black life on St. Helena Island.

Smalls was one of dozens of Gullah scholars, performers, and cultural ambassadors to participate in a homecoming in Sierra Leone last winter. “Gullah Roots,” an hour long documentary by SCETV, captures their experience and delves into the cultural links between SC and West Africa. Photo courtesy of Victoria Smalls.

Victoria has supported the work of the SCAAHC in countless ways including the coordination of historical marker and National Register district projects, leading seminars and public lectures about Gullah and African American history, and, last year, hosting our annual teacher workshop at Penn Center.

Standing over 6 feet tall, Victoria’s kindness, grace, soulfulness, and towering intellect endear her to everyone she meets. The SCAAHC is grateful for Victoria’s tireless efforts to preserve our places in history.

Victoria Smalls recently accepted a position with the National Park Service at the Reconstruction Era National Historic Park!

The South Carolina African American Heritage Commission extends its condolences to all affected by the recent passing of Dr. Ade Ofunniyin.

“Dr. O” as he was affectionately known, transitioned to join the ancestors on October 7, 2020, surrounded by his family. He was 67 years old.

Dr. O, founder and director of the Gullah Society and a beloved professor at The College of Charleston, was a staunch advocate for the documentation and preservation of Gullah and Black history in public and academic circles. Born in Charleston, he was the grandson of iconic Charleston blacksmith Phillip Simmons, whose historic ironwork is known worldwide. Dr. O returned to Charleston in 1985 and began an apprenticeship at his grandfather’s blacksmith shop. He later earned a master’s degree in archaeology and his PhD in anthropology from the University of Florida. After completing his studies, Dr. O returned to the “Holy City” and founded the Gullah Society, whose projects have included the documentation and preservation of burial grounds and exhibitions on the African diaspora.

In lieu of flowers, the family has requested that those seeking to pay their final respects donate to the Gullah Society, to ensure that Dr. Ofunniyin’s legacy continues.
Launched by the South Carolina African American Heritage Commission (SCAAHC) in May 2020, Black Carolinians Speak: Portraits of a Pandemic is a document collection and oral history initiative that seeks to capture the story of the African American experience in South Carolina during the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic.

African Americans, as reported in state and national media, have been disproportionately impacted by this public health crisis and the accompanying social and economic distress it has caused. As of the week of October 5th, 34% of those who have died from the virus in South Carolina were African American. The pandemic has also exacerbated existing inequalities and disparities in education, health, and employment. Future generations will seek to understand how this global pandemic redefined what it meant to be Black in South Carolina and how this crisis altered the rhythms and traditions of African American life in the Palmetto State.

African American residents of South Carolina are invited to submit the following:

- First person testimonies
- Letters
- Photographs
- Videos
- Original poetry, art, music
- Journal entries

ALL materials will be housed in the SCAAHC papers at the South Carolina Department of Archives and History and made available to researchers at a later date.

The WeGOJA Foundation, formerly the South Carolina African American Heritage Foundation, was awarded funding from SC Humanities to support the Black Carolinians Speak: Portraits of a Pandemic project.

Funding will be used to conduct and transcribe additional oral histories and develop exhibits and public programs for the project. More details to come.

The 1772 Foundation and the Gaylord and Dorothy Donnelly Foundation have also provided funds to support the broader Black Carolinians Speak oral history initiative.

Funds provided by the Donnelly Foundation will be used specifically to enhance the collection of oral histories from African American residents in the Lowcountry for Portraits of a Pandemic.

We also received funding from the South Carolina Arts Commission and the South Carolina Department of Education to provide professional development for K-12 educators.

The funding will be used to develop professional development sessions to improve content knowledge, cultural competence, and racial sensitivity when dealing with sensitive subject matter in the classroom.

Recordings of these workshops will be utilized as part of a new section for educators on The Green Book of South Carolina website. They will be paired with exciting Black history lesson plans, primary and secondary source materials, and a future “Historic Green Book Tour,” a public Humanities project that will highlight the history of the Negro Motorist Green Book in South Carolina.
Other Grants Received During This Quarter

The South Carolina Department of Archives and History has provided funding to support our “Historic Green Book Survey and Virtual Tour,” a statewide survey of extant buildings that once housed businesses listed in the Negro Motorist Green Book, a popular travel guide for Black travelers during the Jim Crow era.

Funds will be used to support research and documentation of these sites in six SC counties—Richland, Charleston, Chesterfield, Greenville, Florence, and Marion—an important step to preserve these spaces. A virtual tour of one of these sites will be developed as a pilot for the larger “Historic Green Book of South Carolina Tour.”

Lastly, the WeGOJA Foundation received funding from the U.S. Department of Agriculture to erect 20 South Carolina historical markers in rural, underserved areas of the state.

The South Carolina African American Heritage Commission is working with the State Historic Preservation Office staff diligently to complete these markers by early Spring 2021.

First published in 1936 by New York postal worker and entrepreneur Victor Hugo Green, the original Negro Motorist Green Book was created to provide African American travelers with vital information to avoid the embarrassments, difficulties, and dangers caused by southern Jim Crow customs and de facto segregation in other sections of the country. Aided by a cadre of informants—most of whom were Black postal workers—Green and his small, dedicated staff began to list businesses that accommodated Black customers nationwide beginning in 1938. Roughly 200 Black owned businesses and other institutions in South Carolina were listed prior to its final edition in 1967.

We are pleased to announce that the historic house located on 1221 Pine Street, the former site of Ruth’s Beauty Parlor, has been listed in the National Register of Historic Places!!!

On November 20th, the State Review Board will review nominations for three additional extant Green Book sites for consideration by the Department of Interior. If approved at the national level, these sites will join Ruth’s Beauty Parlor and the former tourist home owned by Harriet Cornwell, located on 1713 Wayne Street in Columbia, on the list of national sites deemed worthy of preservation.

Stay tuned to our social media for more details about the virtual Review Board meeting!
Sweet success!

Michael and LaTanya Allen Savor Sweet Success While Sharing the Richness of Gullah Culture

As is common within Gullah culture, adversity offered an opportunity to make something from nothing. “When COVID hit, all of the markets shut down,” LaTanya Allen remembers, “We had the grand idea to start selling our products virtually.” Inspired by necessity, she and her husband, Michael Allen—a veteran historian, cultural interpreter, and SCAAHC charter member—started selling Gullah delicacies online. The outcome was Tastee Treats, an exciting new business venture rooted in Gullah culinary traditions that is taking the world by storm.

“My grandmother would make fruitcakes, nut cakes, and Charleston chews, pound cakes, and bread pudding, and she would sell them. She just didn’t have the internet. It was done word of mouth. She would sell them to all of her church people, friends and family.” During visits home from college, LaTanya shelled and ground nuts, mixed ingredients, packaged baked goods, and cleaned the kitchen.

“It was a bonding time. She would tell me stories about her mother or her upbringing that I could pass on to my children,” she recalled. Equally important were the family recipes and secret techniques she shared.

The Tastee Treats menu features a variety of Gullah delicacies made from recipes that once belonged to her mother and grandmother, with a few modern twists. Among them are Charleston Chews, a confection made with dates, cranberries, walnuts and pecans. These are sold individually and as a dry mix for customers seeking to indulge in the taste of the Lowcountry at home. They also sell a variety of syrups and preserves in traditional and unique modern flavors.

“As our product it says ‘Indulge in the Rich Gullah Flavor,’” Michael adds. “It’s an acknowledgement of our Gullah history and culture, how Gullah culture influenced the development of the New World, and how American cuisine has evolved.” Both stressed that these confections are evidence of how Black people have survived across generations and enjoyed life despite hardship. LaTanya creatively adopts flavors from other cultures, such as mango, to flavor her syrups and preserves, which add a touch of flair to simple dishes like sea bass.

“Gullah-Geechee people show our love through food...Some people say they make Gullah food but they are trying to make it healthy. It’s not truly Gullah without a little pork.”

The couple is well aware that commercial references to Gullah often result in questions of authenticity. Being “fo’ true” Gullah descendants not only nullifies claims of appropriation but motivates them to connect the story of their people to the product. “We’re selling these items at former places of enslavement where these goods were made historically but they weren’t wrapped in a nice package and the enslaved weren’t paid for it,” Michael explains. To date, the Allens have negotiated agreements to sell their products at Lowcountry historic sites such as McLeod, Boone Hall, and Middleton Plantations and the Caw Caw Interpretive Center.

Armed with deep historical knowledge and culinary skill, the Allens have big dreams for their business and their efforts to share Gullah foodways worldwide. They hope to achieve success similar to famed BBQ master Rodney Scott, a native of Hemmingway, or Edisto Island’s own Kardea Brown, host of “Delicious Miss Brown” on the Food Network. A piece of their success, Michael stressed, can be credited to the SCAAHIC. “Being a part of the African American Heritage Commission and just seeing how the interpretation and respect for Gullah history has grown...it has been an essential part of this journey. Maybe we don’t toot our horns enough but we were there. People need to know that.” — Ramon Jackson
