Colleton County Historical and Architectural Inventory

1. NAME OF SURVEY

Colleton County Historical and Architectural Inventory, 1992 - 1995

2. BOUNDARIES OF SURVEY AREA

The area surveyed during this project is all that area known as Colleton County, South Carolina. Phase One consisted of all that area within the county southeast of Interstate 95 excluding the City of Walterboro. Phase Two consisted of all that area within the City of Walterboro. Phase Three consisted of all that area within the county northwest of Interstate 95 excluding the City of Walterboro.

3. NUMBER OF PROPERTIES SURVEYED

Total: 1506 individual resources were surveyed at a total of 1288 sites.

Phase 1: 688 individual resources were surveyed at a total of 531 sites.
Phase 2: 417 individual resources were surveyed at a total of 388 sites.
Phase 3: 401 individual resources were surveyed at a total of 369 sites.

4. NUMBER OF SQUARE MILES SURVEYED

Approximately 1,052 square miles for the entire county.

5. SURVEYORS

Project Managers/ John A. Kissane Principal Surveyors: Amy C. Kissane Principal Landscape Architect: Dale Jaeger

Associate Surveyors: Emmeline Embry and Leslie Sharp (1993)

Emmeline Embry and Nancy Condon (1994) Emmeline Embry and Lilly Hardison (1994-95)

6. BEGINNING AND ENDING DATES OF SURVEY

The Colleton County Historical and Architectural Inventory was carried out in three phases.

Phase 1: March 1993 to August 1993 Phase 2: February 1994 to August 1994

Phase 3: October 1994 to August 1995 (reconnaissance survey conducted in October 1993)

Draft products from each phase were submitted to the South Carolina Department of Archives and History and the Walterboro-Colleton Chamber of Commerce for review and comment. All final products are scheduled to be submitted by 31 August 1995.

7. OBJECTIVES OF SURVEY

The Colleton County Historical and Architectural Inventory was undertaken as part of the survey program of the South Carolina Department of Archives and History. Known as the South Carolina Statewide Survey of Historic Places, this program is the foundation of South Carolina's historic preservation program and is conducted through the State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO) within the Department of Archives and History. The primary objectives of the survey program are to identify historic and prehistoric resources, record their locations, and evaluate their significance in the context of South Carolina's history. The information gathered by the statewide survey is used by the SHPO in its other programs (for example, the National Register of Historic Places and environmental review) and enables the SHPO to work effectively with local communities in their historic preservation efforts. In addition, survey information often functions as a useful planning tool for local governments and economic development organizations.

8. METHODOLOGY OF SURVEY

The survey has been undertaken in accordance with the Survey Manual of the South Carolina Statewide Survey of Historic Places. The Survey Manual recommends a five phase approach for completing historic resource surveys: A) background historical research of the survey area; B) reconnaissance survey; C) intensive survey; D) research on individual properties; and E) preparation of a survey report.

A) Background Historical Research

Research on the historical development of Colleton County has been an ongoing part of this project. Initially, research was conducted to identify general themes and historic contexts important to the development of Colleton County. This information was utilized by surveyors during their fieldwork to help them know what to expect in the field and to help them understand the physical resources they observed and documented. In turn, surveyors have used their field observations to identify additional historic contexts and to enhance available historic materials. Additional research was conducted at local repositories, the South Carolina Department of Archives and History, the South Caroliniana Library at the University of South Carolina, the South Carolina Historical Society in Charleston, the National Archives - Southeast Region at East Point, Georgia, and at the main library of the University of Georgia in Athens. A series of interviews was conducted with local Colleton County residents.

The "Historical Background" section of this report is a culmination of extensive research of written documentation, historic maps, oral history, and field observations. The narrative has been revised and supplemented with the completion of each additional phase.

B) Reconnaissance Survey

A reconnaissance survey is normally conducted as a way to a) identify all resources eligible for intensive survey at a later date and b) predict an estimate of total resources to be surveyed. The survey is carried out by driving all roads in the survey area and indicating the location of sites on United States Geological Survey (USGS) maps or community maps when appropriate.

For Phase One, The Jaeger Company conducted the reconnaissance survey concurrently with the intensive survey for Phase One of this project. This approach is also recommended by the State Historic Preservation Office. In lieu of a reconnaissance survey at the beginning of Phase One, The Jaeger Company compared historic USGS maps of Colleton County dating from 1915, 1918 and 1943 with the most recent USGS maps to identify potential extant historic sites. Named resources such as churches and schools were especially noted.

For Phases Two and Three, however, reconnaissance surveys were carried out prior to the Intensive Survey phase. The Jaeger Company determined that arriving at an accurate number of sites to be included in the Intensive Survey phase was helpful and increased the efficiency of scheduling field work and budgeting time.

C) Intensive Survey

During the Phase One intensive survey, all roads in the Phase One area of Colleton County were traveled, site locations were recorded on USGS maps, individual survey cards were completed, on-site interviews were conducted, and black-and-white photographs were taken of all properties. Properties potentially eligible for National Register listing were noted. The intensive survey for Phase One was carried out during March and April of 1993. Additional site work, including local research and interviews, was carried out during May and June.

A special component of Phase One was the documentation of numerous plantations and their associated resources in the southern half of the county. Arrangements for visiting the properties were made through the Walterboro-Colleton Chamber of Commerce. Types of resources documented included plantation houses, associated outbuildings, slave cabins, rice fields and other resources associated with the rice culture, and landscape features.

The reconnaissance survey for Phase Two was carried out during the period 21-25 February. Intensive survey work was completed during two periods in March and April of 1994. Additional site work, including local research and interviews, was carried out in August.

The reconnaissance survey for Phase Three was carried out in October 1993. Intensive survey work was completed during two periods in November-December of 1994 and April of 1995. Additional site work, including local research and interviews was carried out during July.

During the intensive surveys for Phases 2 and 3, site numbers were recorded on USGS maps, individual survey cards were completed, on-site interviews were conducted, and black-and-white photographs were taken of all properties. Properties potentially eligible for National Register listing were noted.

Slides were taken in July 1995 of all properties, Phases 1 -3, determined potentially eligible for National Register listing by the South Carolina Department of Archives and History.

Resources eligible for intensive survey were defined as:

- a) Buildings, sites, structures and objects that have kept their integrity and were constructed prior to 1 January 1943;
- b) Buildings, sites, structures and objects that were constructed after 1 January 1943 that have special significance, historical associations or uncommon design qualities;
- c) Man-made landscape features and natural landscapes with cultural associations; and
- d) Properties already listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

In Phase Three, resources along portions of the Edisto River and Ashepoo River were surveyed with assistance from the South Carolina Wildlife and Marine Resources Department. Dean Harrigal, Wildlife Biologist of the ACE Basin Project, guided the Principal Landscape Architect to several known sites. These included several rice chimneys, military fortifications, and a canal. Survey cards were prepared for these sites. Limited historical information was available.

D) Research on Individual Properties

Historic information on individual properties was gathered, when possible, in several different ways. Attempts were always made to interview occupants/owners during site visits. Information about specific sites was passed on to surveyors during public meetings held throughout the three phases. Local residents/historians also reviewed copies of draft forms and photographs and added pertinent information. Historic maps, local history narratives, existing National Register nominations (particularly for sites in Phase 2: Walterboro), and a 1979 historic resources survey completed by the Lowcountry Council of Governments were consulted.

E) Survey Report

Completion of this Survey Report is the final aspect of the project.

Public meetings have been held during all three phases of work. Presentations were also made for two consecutive years at the annual meeting of the Walterboro-Colleton County Chamber of Commerce. The survey effort has been a highly publicized activity in Colleton County due to these meetings and coverage by the local media.

9. HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF SURVEY AREA

Geographic Overview

The fourth largest county in South Carolina, Colleton County encompasses an area of approximately 1052 square miles and is located in the state's Low Country (or coastal region). It is bounded on the north and east by the Edisto River, on the south by the Combahee River, on the southwest by the Salkehatchie River, and on the northwest by a line beginning at a point on the Salkehatchie River (west of the intersection of SC 641 and US 601) and running northeast to the Edisto River, just beyond the intersection of SC 61 and US 21. At the center of this northwestern boundary line is an indentation that represents a small piece of land formerly in Colleton County and now part of Bamberg County.

Southeastern Colleton County contains numerous islands that constitute a portion of South Carolina's sea island complex, a 100-mile island chain situated between the Santee River to the north and the Savannah River to the south. Edisto (only a portion of which is within Colleton County), Otter and Pine islands are considered barrier islands, as they front directly on the Atlantic Ocean. Ashe, Bear, Beet, Bennetts, Bluff, Boulder, Cattle, Fenwick, Hutchinson, Musselboro, Sampson and Warren islands are known as erosion remnant islands. Originally part of the mainland, these islands were created as recently as 10,000 years ago as the Ice Age came to an end and higher sea levels resulted. All of Colleton County's islands are located within the state's Coastal Zone, a thin band of land which extends approximately ten miles inland from the coastline. The remainder of the county is located in the Outer Coastal Plain, a substantial and relatively flat land area that extends from the Coastal Zone to the Inner Coastal Plain.

The Outer Coastal Plain can be divided into two sub-areas, which during the late-nineteenth century were termed the "lower pine belt" and the "upper pine belt." Most of Colleton County, other than that portion in the Coastal Zone, is located in the lower pine belt. This is an area dominated by the long leaf pine, although bay, black walnut, cypress, elm, hickory, live oak, magnolia, sweet gum, tulip and white oak are also found here. A variety of swamp lands are found in the lower pine belt, including cypress ponds (shallow flats thickly grown in cypress), bays (oval or elliptically shaped depressions ringed by bay, gum and tulip trees) and open savannas.³

Colleton County contains portions of four major rivers: the Ashepoo, the Combahee, the Edisto and the Salkehatchie. Smaller waterways and swamps in the county include Bear Creek, Big Bay Swamp, Black Creek, Bluehouse Swamp, Buckhead Creek, Calfpen Swamp, the Chehaw River, Chessy Creek, Cross Swamp, Cuckolds Creek, Deed Creek, Folly Creek, Fuller Swamp Creek, Great Swamp, Hell Hole Swamp, Horseshoe Creek, Johno Creek, the Little Salkehatchie River, Little Swamp, Maple Cane Swamp, Moselle Swamp, Social Hall Creek, Snuggedy Swamp and Tupelo Swamp.

Present-day Colleton County is but a portion of the original Colleton County, established in 1682. Colleton was one of the three South Carolina counties created that year, the others being Berkeley and Craven, and over the subsequent three centuries several boundary changes were made. The Church Act of 1706 established the Anglican Church as the state church and provided for the creation of ten parishes that functioned as election districts until 1865. Two of the parishes, St. Bartholomew's and St. Paul's, made up the land area that was then Colleton County. Colleton County's present boundaries are basically those of St. Bartholomew's Parish with the addition of a small portion of Edisto Island.

[NOTE: Efforts have been made during preparation of this historic profile to recognize historic changes to Colleton County's political boundaries. Whenever possible, references to nineteenth century census data are made for St. Bartholomew's Parish, thereby providing statistics for the historic land area closest to that of present-day Colleton County. When mention is made of "Colleton District," it should be understood that this designation includes significant amounts of land outside the present boundaries of Colleton County.]

Native American Indian Era, To c.1750

South Carolina's Low Country was populated by numerous small bands of native peoples from as early as approximately 8,500 B. C. The lands that became Colleton County were home to tribes of Muskhogean origin, known collectively as the Cusabo. Of this group it is believed that a powerful band known as the Coosa was centered along the Ashepoo and Combahee rivers as well as along portions of the Edisto River.⁵

In the 1680s an Indian tribe known as the Yemassee moved northward from the coast of Georgia to an area between the Combahee and Savannah rivers. During the next three decades this tribe became increasingly resentful of encroachments upon their lands, and in 1715 they initiated what developed into a major war that proved devastating in the area of present-day Colleton County. The war started in the vicinity of present-day Pocotaligo (Beaufort County), and during its course the Yemassee made their way across St. Bartholomew's Parish and crossed the Edisto River to approach Charleston. The Yemassees were able to recruit neighboring tribes to their cause, and had the Cherokees not come to the aid of the colony, the outcome could have been even more disastrous. By the time the war was finally ended in late 1717 the entire parish had been virtually evacuated of both people and cattle, one of the primary means of livelihood for the early white settlers.⁶

The primary remnants of the historic Indian presence in Colleton County are many of the county's place names and geographical features. The county's four major rivers -- the Ashepoo, Combahee, Edisto and Salkehatchie -- all retain names of Indian derivation.

Early European Exploration, 1526-1670

The first white people to explore South Carolina were the Spanish, when in 1526 Lucas Vasquez de Ayllon led an expedition that landed to the south of present-day Georgetown. Although unsuccessful, this venture initiated the first period of Spanish exploration in South Carolina. In 1539, for example, Hernando De Soto departed from Florida and traveled north through South Carolina on his way to the Blue Ridge Mountains before eventually heading west to the Mississippi River. Several unsuccessful attempts to settle South Carolina and Florida followed, and in 1561 King Philip II temporarily halted Spanish exploration of the region.

In 1562 Frenchman Jean Ribault entered Santa Elena (Helena) Sound and landed at Port Royal, which he named. A fort was constructed at the site, but the attempt to establish a colony at Port Royal proved unsuccessful.⁹ The Spanish responded to this French activity by establishing their own settlement on Santa Elena and constructing Fort San Felipe, from which they began exploring certain portions of inland South Carolina.¹⁰ Fort San Felipe was a moderate success, for it included a mission and an agricultural community, but after Sir Frances Drake defeated the Spanish at St. Augustine in 1586 the Santa Elena settlement was soon abandoned.¹¹

On 30 October 1629 England's King Charles I granted the territory between the 31st and 36th parallels north latitude -- an area then known as "Carolana" -- to Sir Robert Heath. Very little effort was made to colonize the territory, and soon civil war occupied the attention of most Englishmen. Some, however, were active on the West Indian island of Barbados, and it was from there that the next colonial efforts in South Carolina would in part originate. 12

It is not known for certain whether any of the French or Spanish explorations penetrated the present-day boundaries of Colleton County. Spanish missionaries are thought to have been active among the Cusabo Indians along the Edisto River, however, and some historians contend that a group of Franciscan monks maintained a mission on the Ashepoo River for a time. 13

Initial English Settlement and Growth of the Colony, 1670-1763

At some point between 1660 and 1663, a group of eight prominent Englishmen joined together in an effort to secure control of South Carolina. These eight men -- the Duke of Albemarle, Lord Ashley, Lord John Berkeley, Sir William Berkeley, Sir George Carteret, the Earl of Clarendon, Sir John Colleton (namesake of Colleton County), and the Earl of Craven -- all had previous experience in colonial ventures. Colleton, for example, had been loyal to Charles I during the English Civil War and after Charles's execution in 1649 fled to Barbados. Upon the restoration of Charles II to the throne in 1660, Colleton returned to England and was knighted. In 1663 Charles II established the eight as "True and Absolute Lords Proprietors of Carolina" and granted them virtually unlimited powers in the territory previously granted to Sir Robert Heath.

A variety of factors -- ranging from the Duke of Albemarle's poor health and the death of Sir John Colleton in 1667 to the Great Fire and plagues that ravaged London to false assumptions on the part of the Proprietors that eager settlers would be easily attracted -- contributed to a lack of settlement efforts in South Carolina from 1663 through 1668. In 1669, however, Lord Ashley convinced the other Proprietors to take serious steps toward seeing South Carolina settled. Sufficient money was allocated for establishment of a settlement at Port Royal and three ships set sail from England in the fall of 1669. One of the three ships, the Carolina, landed at Kiawah in the spring of 1670 and began a settlement at Albemarle Point, later named Charles Town. 17

The pace of settlement in South Carolina was very slow during the 1670s and quickened only marginally during the following decade, but the early distribution of land was a vital matter even so. The headright system was utilized, and grants of 150 acres were made to every free person over sixteen years of age who arrived prior to 25 March 1670. Additional allotments were made for family members, servants and slaves (150 acres for adults and 100 acres for persons under sixteen). Adult males arriving after 25 March 1670 received 100 acres, and, as before, additional allotments were made for family members, servants and slaves. This policy may have been intended to encourage the importation of slaves, but relatively few were actually brought into South Carolina during the 1670s. 18 At this time the South Carolina headright grants were substantially larger than those being made in the other American Colonies, and even a single headright of 100 or 150 acres was considerably more than an individual could farm. Furthermore, the Proprietors also granted much more sizable holdings to selected individuals, primarily persons to whom they were somehow indebted. 19

It was the Proprietors' intent that a series of towns be established early on, but this did not occur. Instead, the primary settlement developed at the confluence of the Ashley and Cooper rivers after the Proprietors determined in 1672 that this location would be favorable. Ocharles Town was relocated from Albemarle Point to the new Oyster Point site in 1680 and established itself as the commercial center of the colony. Most of the other early settlers tended to locate along the region's principal rivers, primarily further inland on the Ashley and the Cooper. Ocharles Towns are represented to locate along the region's principal rivers, primarily further inland on the Ashley and the Cooper.

In 1682 the first three South Carolina counties -- Berkeley, Colleton and Craven -- were created. Although it was intended that the new counties would wield certain powers of sovereignty, Charles Town remained the center of governmental and judicial activities. ²² Also in 1682, efforts were made to control the dispersal of settlement to the interior of the province, with limits placed on the granting of lands more than certain distances from the Ashley, Cooper and Stono rivers. The headright, which had been reduced from 100 to 70 acres in 1679, was further reduced to 50 acres in 1682, and in 1685 grants were restricted to lands within 35 miles of the Atlantic. ²³ Growth of the colony remained slow until around 1730, when it is estimated that the colony's population stood at 30,000. By the time of the Revolution, this total had nearly tripled. ²⁴

Early Settlers and Settlements

As established in 1682, Colleton County was bounded on the southwest by the Combahee River and on the southeast by the Atlantic Ocean and included most of present-day Dorchester County as well as Edisto and Johns islands. It is virtually impossible to make population estimates for Colleton County during the Colonial period. Records of early land transactions are poorly indexed and inadequately analyzed.

There is little recorded information about Colleton County's earliest residents or settlements, though it is generally accepted that many of the first settlers established themselves on and near the Edisto River, in the vicinity of presentday Jacksonboro. It is also likely that the Ashepoo, Chehaw and Combahee rivers were sites of early settlement activity. The last twenty miles or so of the Edisto River was known as the Pon Pon River during the period of initial white settlement, the name believed to have originated with an Indian village on the river. An unsuccessful colonial town, also named Pon Pon, was apparently located on the Edisto near Jacksonboro.25 In about 1701 a 400 acre grant in this area was made to John Jackson, namesake of Jacksonboro, but the village was not laid out until the early-1740s. A total of 113 lots were marked off; 75 of these had been purchased by 1780 and the place was quite well established by that time with as many as 60 dwellings. The name "Jacksonborough" was apparently not officially used until 1803, however. 26 Located approximately eight miles to the south of Jacksonboro on the east side of the Edisto River (and thus in an area outside St. Bartholomew's Parish and no longer in Colleton County) was Willtown, an important settlement that developed before Jacksonboro but had declined by about 1850.27 Its early presence furthers the evidence that most of the early settlement activity was along the Edisto.

Located approximately ten to twelve miles northwest of Jacksonboro, in the vicinity of Horseshoe Lead Creek and Chessey Creek, is an area that became known as the Round O savanna. The name Round O is of Indian derivation and apparently comes from a chief who had a circular tattoo on his chest. Prior to the Yemassee War, the Round O was an area given over to the raising of livestock, but soon thereafter it developed into the one of the locations where inland rice was grown.²⁸ The Round O, therefore, became a center of activity as early as about 1700.

The Yemassee War, which came to an end in 1717, left St. Bartholomew's Parish virtually uninhabited, and thus whatever progress toward permanent settlement had been made prior to the war was forfeited.²⁹ The entire parish is estimated to have had only 379 residents in 1720, of whom 235 were white and 144 were black slaves. This is in contrast to the more than 18,000 people living in all of South Carolina in 1720.30 Historian Duncan David Wallace has suggested that the very low level of slave ownership in St. Bartholomew's Parish shortly after the Yemassee War is an indication of how debilitating the war was to the parish. In 1722, for example, St. Bartholomew's had an estimate of only 151 slaves working on 36,957 acres, an average of only one slave for every 245 acres. (This acreage figure represents total taxable acres; only a small portion of this land was actually being farmed in any way in 1722.) In contrast, all of the parishes of Berkeley County taken together averaged one slave for every 106 acres (7,669 slaves on 813,588 taxable acres) in 1722. St. Phillip's Parish and Charles Town Neck, in Berkeley County, together had an average of one slave for every 62 acres.³¹

Government and Religion

During the colonial period, government and religion were closely allied. The Church Act of 1706 designated the Anglican Church as the established church of the colony while also permitting dissenters to hold political office. Furthermore, the Act created ten parishes and churches in the province; these parishes functioned as governmental units and served as election districts for representation in colonial and state legislatures until 1865.³²

Two Anglican parishes were created in Colleton County in 1706, St. Bartholomew's and St. Paul's. (Colleton County's present-day boundaries are essentially those of St. Bartholomew's Parish.) In 1725 the General Assembly established Pon Pon Chapel of Ease on Parker's Ferry Road, which at that time was the stage road between Charleston and Savannah. A wooden structure was built as the first permanent chapel in St. Bartholomew's Parish and was replaced by a brick structure in 1754. The second chapel burned in 1801 and was rebuilt between 1819 and 1822, only to burn once again in 1832. The ruins of Pon Pon Chapel (Site No. 248 0004) constitute one of only four individual National Register listings in Colleton County.³³

Another of the earliest churches in St. Bartholomew's Parish was Bethel Presbyterian Church, established near Jacksonboro in 1728 by Reverend Archibald Stobo from Scotland. Although this church served many from the Jacksonboro area, the congregation was moved to Walterboro early in the nineteenth century; the original church building burned in 1886.³⁴ White Meeting Cemetery (Site No. 248 0019) is directly adjacent to the former site of Bethel Presbyterian Church and contains the graves of many early settlers in the Jacksonboro vicinity. The oldest marker is believed to be from 1788. This cemetery is also the burial site of Captain John Herbert Dent, who served as acting captain of the frigate "Constitution" in 1804 during the Siege of Tripoli and also was a senior officer in charge of naval affairs at Charleston during the War of 1812. Dent died on his Combahee River plantation in 1823.³⁵

In 1719 a revolt was staged against the Proprietors. This action resulted in part because the Proprietors had failed to answer calls for assistance from settlers prior to the Yemassee War, nor had they dealt with off-shore pirates who regularly plundered rice shipments. South Carolina was thus established as a Royal Colony in 1721 and began a period of significant growth that would continue until the American Revolution.³⁶

Agriculture and Commerce

Trade with the native population was critical to the economy of the province between 1680 and 1710. Deer and other animal skins constituted South Carolina's primary export commodity during this period, and these items were acquired primarily from the Indians.³⁷ Also common, though illegal at the time, was activity in the Indian slave trade. Some of the enslaved Indians were kept in South Carolina, but the majority were sent to the West Indies.³⁸ The naval stores and forest products industry developed slowly during the late-seventeenth century, primarily due to a labor shortage, but by the early 1720s more than 40,000 barrels of pitch and tar were being exported out of the colony each year. As this industry grew, the importation of black slaves from Africa and Barbados became more vital to the colonial economy.³⁹

Especially important to Colleton County was the raising of livestock, which ranked third among South Carolina's major export commodities after animal skins and naval stores. Large herds of cattle and hogs were allowed to run free through the forests and across the grasslands of Colleton County during the early 1700s. Most of the animals were lost during the Yemassee War of 1715, and even though the industry was later re-established it was centered further west and thus did not play much of a role in the Colleton County economy.⁴⁰

Sometime prior to 1690 the first attempts at rice cultivation were made in South Carolina. It is not clear exactly when rice was brought into the colony or by whom, nor is it certain where the rice originated. The most widely advanced theory is that the first seed was brought to South Carolina from the island of Madagascar, off the coast of east Africa, in about 1685, but some contend that rice was being grown in the province well prior to that date. And Regardless of its origins, rice became a vital component of the South Carolina economy by about 1715, when more than 8,000 barrels were exported from Charles Town. Production increased steadily through the remainder of the colonial period: 18,000 barrels were exported in 1724; 43 40,000 barrels in 1730; 44 and 90,000 barrels in 1770.

The earliest South Carolina rice was grown in open fields, without irrigation, much in the fashion of European grain crops. By the 1730s or 1740s, however, most rice production had been moved to inland swamps. Here, after the swamps had been cleared, systems of canals, dams, ditches, and sluice gates known as trunks were utilized to allow fields to be flooded and drained at optimal times. Fresh water was needed for irrigation (since salt water would destroy the crop), but the growing rice had to be close enough to salt water to allow for flooding and drainage at the proper intervals.⁴⁶ It is likely that slaves brought from Africa provided the knowledge of rice-growing techniques necessary for a successful industry to develop.⁴⁷ Colleton County played an important role during this first half-century of South Carolina rice production. An area roughly bounded by a line connecting present-day Walterboro, Cottageville, Jacksonboro and Green Pond was the center of a particularly active rice-growing region. Horseshoe Creek, a tributary of the Ashepoo River, was the primary source of water necessary to alternately flood and drain the swamplands of this area, which includes the Round O savanna. At least two existing Colleton County plantations, Beech Hill (Site No. 227/356 0269)) and Ravenwood (Site No. 356 0271), exhibit remnants of inland rice fields. It is not known how old these fields are, however.

As rice production increased through the early decades of the eighteenth century, so too did the need for labor, and the importation of black slaves from Africa and Barbados was accelerated to meet this need. The lack of census data prior to 1790 means that estimates must be used. By 1700 blacks already made up approximately 43 percent of South Carolina's total population (2,444 of 5,704 residents). Within ten years blacks were in the majority (5,768 of 10,883 residents, or 53 percent), and by 1730 they constituted nearly 67 percent of the total population (20,000 of 30,000 residents). Just prior to the American Revolution the black population stood at approximately 80,000 and still represented close to two-thirds of South Carolina's total population of approximately 130,000.⁴⁹

Indigo became a popular coastal crop during the 1740s and 1750s and was first grown in the vicinity of inland rice fields. It is known that Indigo was initially grown all along the coast and as far as 50 miles inland, from the Savannah River north to the Georgetown area.⁵⁰ The British Parliament paid a generous subsidy for American indigo, beginning in 1748. This allowed South Carolina planters to grow the crop profitably, but the Revolution brought an end to both the British subsidies and the Indigo boom.⁵¹

The American Revolution and Its Aftermath, 1763-1785

Colleton County was the scene of several military activities and battles during the Revolution, the most important of which was the Battle of Parker's Ferry, located approximately eight miles above Jacksonboro on the Edisto River. General Francis Marion and a force of 400 men stopped the advance of approximately 540 British troops under command of Lieutenant Colonel de Borck, who had been in St. Bartholomew's Parish "procuring" rice (to use a term in a British account) for their hospitals. Although British and Loyalist accounts of the battle differ, it is apparent that Marion's smaller force defeated de Borck on 30 August 1781 and sent his troops in retreat to Charles Town. 52

In early 1782 the St. Bartholomew's Parish village of Jacksonboro temporarily served as the capital of South Carolina. The General Assembly convened on 8 January and remained in session in Jacksonboro until 26 February. British General Cornwallis had surrendered at Yorktown prior to this time, but fighting was still going on, particularly in South Carolina. The decision to meet in Jacksonboro is believed to have been made after the location was suggested by General Nathanael Greene, commander of the Continental Army of South Carolina. Greene had brought his troops to Sanders Hill, in the vicinity of present-day Round O (see Site No. 437 0148), and suggested that he could protect the General Assembly from that location. 53 The Jacksonboro General Assembly elected John Mathews Governor of South Carolina and debated the Amercement and Confiscation Acts, which served to confiscate lands from British sympathizers. Delegates to the Jacksonboro General Assembly from St. Bartholomew's Parish included Senator John Lloyd and Representatives Joseph Glover, Sr., Edmund Hyrne, James Postell, Jr., Richard Singleton, William Skirving, and John Ward 54

Perhaps the most famous resident of St. Bartholomew's Parish to take part in the Revolution was Isaac Hayne, who lived near Jacksonboro at Hayne Hall Plantation and served as a Captain of the Artillery and a Colonel in the militia. Hayne was captured by the British a few miles from Parker's Ferry in July of 1781 and executed in Charleston on 4 August of the same year. The Hayne plantation house was a substantial, three-story, wood building that burned sometime prior to 1800.⁵⁵ The Hayne Family Cemetery, where Colonel Hayne is buried, is on the former site of this building (Site No. 248 0021).

One of the last battles of the Revolution took place at a site known as Tar Bluff (Site No. 555 0556.09), located on the Combahee River southwest of Wiggins. It was here that on 27 August 1782 Colonel John Laurens, who had been a member of the Jacksonboro General Assembly from St. Philip's and St. Michael's Parish and was also an envoy to France, was killed.⁵⁶

Before the Revolution an important church was founded in the southwestern portion of the county. In 1766 the Salkehatchie Presbyterian Church was organized by the Reverend Archibald Simpson, a minister from Scotland. This church was attended primarily by a group of Scotch-Irish settlers who resided in the vicinity of the confluence of the Combahee and Salkehatchie rivers, in the southwestern corner of St. Bartholomew's Parish. The establishment of this church, which was incorporated in 1808, is evidence that this portion of the parish was fairly well populated by the 1760s. Nothing remains of the church building today, but the cemetery (Site No. 569 0368) contains grave markers dating as early as 1790.⁵⁷

Post-War Recovery

The years immediately following the Revolution, which came to a formal end in 1783, were marked by depression and a slow recovery for the entire state of South Carolina. Through the 1780s, South Carolina rice exports stood at only about 50 percent of their pre-war level, an indication that Colleton County was very likely feeling the same devastation hampering the surrounding coastal counties.⁵⁸

Tidal Rice Culture

The gradual shift to inland rice production that had occurred during the first several decades of the eighteenth century brought South Carolina's rice planters greater financial returns, but a variety of problems prompted wide-spread development of tidal irrigation immediately following the American Revolution. Inconsistent weather was a continual source of anxiety among inland planters, as too much rain could lead to flooding of rice fields while dry conditions threatened to dry up reservoirs. There were also difficulties controlling the considerable numbers of black slaves required for inland cultivation due to the great physical hardships work in the swamps entailed. While the move to tidal irrigation would hardly solve these problems, the regular rising and falling of coastal waterways was seen as an attractive alternative to inland irrigation.⁵⁹

Many plantations suffered considerably during the American Revolution, primarily due to inactivity. Most white men were involved in the war and many slaves either escaped or were unwillingly brought into the war effort as laborers. It was therefore virtually impossible for most plantations to carry on with regular production, or even to make necessary repairs to irrigation systems, so at the war's end much work needed to be done. This situation was part of the reason why work necessary to begin tidal cultivation was undertaken during the 1780s; the post-war need to devote time and effort to repairs prompted many of the more prosperous planters to determine that the time was right to try the new technology.⁶⁰ Taking advantage of ocean tides and the region's many rivers and sizable areas of flat land, planters directed their slaves to install elaborate systems of canals, dikes, flood gates and trunks. Once this had been done, it was necessary to clear and drain the vast cypress-forested swamps bordering the Low Country's major rivers. All of this work constituted a monumental undertaking, one that would never have been possible with the toil of thousands of black slaves.

The cultivation of rice through utilization of regular tidal changes was an exacting science, and errors proved very costly. For one, the trunks had to be expertly built and installed so as to be fully functional and dependable under all weather conditions, alternately flooding and draining the rice fields with fresh water. One end of each trunk opened into a rice field while the other opened into a river or stream. Gates were positioned at both ends of the trunk to control the water flow in each direction. At high tide the river gate would be opened; fresh water being pushed up the river in front of the tidal effect would then be able to pass through the trunk and into the rice field. Draining of the field was accomplished during low tides by simply opening the field gate.

The change to tidal cultivation was a key factor in the increasing concentration of wealth among the lowcountry planter elite. Only those able to obtain financing for making repairs and building new systems could fully recover following the Revolution; less affluent farmers had difficulties borrowing money and were given little time to repay loans. The result was an overall reduction in wealth in the region as opportunities for "ordinary" people declined, and yet the most successful planters experienced increased levels of production and profit during the late 1700s and early 1800s.⁶³

Stabilization of the Plantation System, 1785-1820

The First Census of the United States, taken in 1790, indicates that St. Bartholomew's Parish had a total population of 12,606 that year. The maturity of the plantation system in St. Bartholomew's at this date is confirmed by the fact that more than 82 percent of the population, 10,338 in all, were slaves. (By contrast, the percentage of slaves in all of South Carolina stood at only 43 percent in 1790.) There were 538 heads of household in the parish in 1790; 311 of these households, or nearly 58 percent, owned at least one slave. The following table indicates slave ownership in 1790:

The fact that 22 households owned more than 100 slaves in 1790 suggests that there were a good number of very significant plantations in operation by this time. The single most prominent slave owner in 1790 was William Blake, who, according to census records, owned 695 slaves. Nathaniel Heyward owned 420 at this time, followed by Rawlins Lowndes with 293.65

The period between the end of the American Revolution and 1820 was one of considerable demographic change for South Carolina, for during this period the number of black slaves in the Up Country surpassed the number in the Low Country. This development was due in part to the decline of indigo across the state in the 1790s, but considerably more important was the rise of cotton in the state's interior after the invention of the cotton gin in 1793. 66 Cotton was also grown successfully on the sea islands and in portions of the Coastal Zone beginning around 1790, but St. Bartholomew's Parish was never one of South Carolina's major cotton producers. Nevertheless, cotton eventually became quite important to an area north of the large rice plantations centered at the Round O vicinity. Farms in this region were fairly small, most 100 acres or less. 67

Between 1790 and 1820 the population of St. Bartholomew's Parish increased fairly modestly, from 12,606 to 14,882. This increase of 18 percent pales in comparison to the overall South Carolina increase of 49 percent during the same thirty year period (249,073 in 1790 to 490,309 in 1820). Whites and free persons of color in St. Bartholomew's increased by nearly 24 percent between 1790 and 1820 (2,268 to 2,805) while slaves increased by 17 percent (10,338) to 12,077).⁶⁸ The fact that the slave population did not grow rapidly during this period, and actually grew at a slower rate than the free population, further indicates that the Colleton County plantation system was well-established by 1790 and during the period 1790-1820 grew only marginally and in fact stabilized.

Walterboro as a Summer Retreat

The village that eventually became known as Walterboro is believed to have originated as early as 1784, when Jacob and Paul Walter built summer cottages near Ireland Creek in an area soon known as Hickory Valley. The Walter brothers were Edisto River rice planters residing in the vicinity of Jacksonboro, and they had traveled northwest of the river in search of higher ground and a relief from mosquitoes. Both men had lost family members to malaria, a disease carried by the mosquitoes that thrived in the stagnant swamps and backwaters of Colleton County. Many plantation owners had summer homes in Charleston, but, seeking a more convenient and less expensive location, several other families soon joined the Walters along Ireland Creek. [Note: The Hickory Valley Historic District and the Walterboro Historic District are listed on the National Register of Historic Places and are Site Nos. 536 0002 and 536 0005. Properties in these districts still retaining architectural integrity were surveyed individually during Phase Two and were assigned individual site numbers at that time.]

By the 1790s it had become quite common for Low Country planters and their families to make summer migrations away from their plantation homes. The period of the year from about mid-May through the first killing frost was known at this time as the "sickly season," the time during which the plantations were least healthful. The planters would leave their overseers in charge of plantation operations, occasionally returning by day to observe their properties and the work being done by their slaves. 70 The first popular summertime destinations were coastal cities and sea-island beaches, though later the North Carolina mountains also attracted numerous South Carolinians. Prior to the American Revolution, Colonel Joseph Glover and his family had taken to leaving Colleton County each summer and traveling to Newport, Rhode Island. Known as the "Carolina Hospital," Newport was a destination for South Carolina planters as early as the 1760s.71 The Heyward family, dominant Combahee River planters, evacuated Colleton County each spring for Charleston and returned to their plantations in November. On the 9th of November, 1843, after spending the summer and early fall in Charleston, Nathaniel Heyward's daughter wrote from

Planters from South Carolina's more inland regions tended to stay closer to their plantation properties and sought out "pine-barrens" as sites for their summer cottages. These locations were pine ridges, somewhat higher in elevation than the nearby rice country and thick with pine trees. By about 1800 Walterboro had developed into one of several significant pine-barren resorts, and by the 1830s it would support a summertime population of approximately 900; less than half of that number represented year-round residents. 73 The town was designated the seat of justice for Colleton District in 1817 and a courthouse (Site No. 536 0001) was constructed c.1820.74 The rise of Walterboro coincided somewhat with the decline of Jacksonboro. With many of the nearby planters taking their families away from May until November each year, the village no doubt suffered economically. In addition, a fire in 1807 destroyed several major buildings that were never rebuilt. Once the seat of government had been moved to Walterboro, the community virtually died. The Charleston and Savannah Railroad, completed in 1860, passes within about half a mile from the original Jacksonboro site and caused a slight revival of the town 75

Community Development

The first post office in St. Bartholomew's Parish opened at Jacksonboro in 1792, an indication that Jacksonboro remained the most established settlement in the parish at that time. In 1811, however, the Jacksonboro post office was closed and moved to Jacksonboro Crossroads, situated at the intersection of roads coming into the parish from Jacksonboro and Parker's Ferry, located on the Edisto several miles north of Jacksonboro. (This intersection is approximately the present-day location of the intersection of South Carolina 64 and County Road 40.) This same post office was returned to Jacksonboro in 1813 and subsequently moved back to Jacksonboro Crossroads in 1815. Also in 1815, the second post office in St. Bartholomew's Parish opened at a location named Red Bank, along Red Bank Creek near the present-day community of Canadys. In 1816 the original Jacksonboro post office was moved yet again, this time from Jacksonboro Crossroads to Parker's Ferry. A post office opened in Walterboro on 27 March 1820, indicating the elevated status of the community by that year. Finally, a post office opened at Fish Pond Bridge on 28 March 1820, very near the present-day community of Ritter. Thus, in 1820, St. Bartholomew's Parish had four post offices in operation, located at Parker's Ferry, Red Bank, Walterboro and Fish Pond Bridge, 76

Antebellum Period, 1820-1860

The period from 1820 to 1860 was one of moderate growth in St. Bartholomew's Parish. The population of the parish increased by 22 percent overall between 1820 and 1850 (from 14,882 to 18,157), and much of this increase was due to 51 percent growth among the white population (from 2,693 in 1820 to 4,073 in 1850). The number of slaves in the parish also increased between 1820 and 1850, but by only 15 percent (from 12,077 to 13,913).⁷⁷ The southern half of the parish, roughly from Walterboro south, was the primary area of activity during this period, but the northern half of the county showed signs of development.

Robert Mills' Atlas of the State of South Carolina provides an informative map of Colleton District in the year 1825. (See Map 1) Walterboro is prominently visible at the center of St. Bartholomew's Parish and is clearly the primary town in the district. Jacksonboro and Parker's Ferry, both on the Edisto River, are the only other locations in the parish that at this date would apparently be classified as villages. Several main roads are clearly indicated on the map, including a stage road that enters the parish at the Salkehatchie River near its confluence with the Combahee. This road forks at Jacksonboro Crossroads, with one branch going to Parker's Ferry where it passes out of the parish and on to "Rantowles Bridge" at the Stono River. The other branch goes to Jacksonboro and also eventually reaches Rantowles Bridge. Several roads lead out of Walterboro, including a "Road to Round O." There is also a "Round O Road" leading away from Parker's Ferry in a northwesterly direction. Round O was not a true community at this date but rather an area of dispersed settlement. Running parallel to the Edisto River above "Givhan Ferry" is a "Road to Charleston," which also appears to be a major route. The northwestern corner of the parish contains roads to Augusta and Barnwell. The parish in 1825 thus contains roads in all sections, with the highest concentration in the east between Walterboro and Jacksonboro and the lowest concentration in the extreme south. Mill's map also provides numerous names of residents, including many of the major plantation owners such as Bellinger, Blake, Glover, Heyward, and Sanders, among others. Major and minor waterways are indicated, several of which have had name changes since 1825.⁷⁸

Agriculture

During the Antebellum period, Colleton County's agricultural production, as well as its entire economy, continued to be dominated by rice. In 1840, for example, Colleton District ranked fourth among South Carolina's 29 districts in rice production with 5.5 million pounds. Colleton District also ranked fifth in production of sweet potatoes in 1840, but was not a leader in any other agricultural product. ⁷⁹ By 1860, Colleton District ranked second among the state's 30 districts in rice production with 22.8 million pounds. Although

Georgetown was well ahead with 55.8 million pounds, only two other districts in the state (Beaufort and Charleston, both with about 18.8 million pounds) produced more than 750,000 pounds of rice in 1860.80

In the spring of 1828, Scottish-born Margaret Hunter Hall, along with her husband Basil and their daughter Eliza, arrived in South Carolina on part of a fourteen-month tour of the United States. At least portions of three days of this journey were spent in St. Bartholomew's Parish, including visits to plantations owned by the Skirvings and the Heywards. Mrs. Hall's journal entries from these visits are quite enlightening and provide some useful information concerning the appearance of the parish in 1828 as well as life on two large plantations at that time.

The Halls were traveling from Charleston and spent their first night out at Jacksonboro (which Mrs. Hall spelled "Jacksonburgh"). The following morning they set off for the Skirving's plantation. Mrs. Hall described the road they traveled as being "...very interesting, partly through forests of pine and live-oak and partly through nicely cultivated fields and the whole way covered with innumerable beautiful flowers and shrubs. The road was most excellent...."81 The Skirving's plantation (which was not identified during Phase One field work) also met with Mrs. Hall's approval, and her comments portray life as easy and bountiful for the Skirvings but quite the opposite for their black slaves:

The more we saw of the house the more did our inclination to remain increase. Everything looked so clean and comfortable. The bed rooms, especially, were such as we have not been used to of late, with their snow-white quilts and draperies, delightful arm chair and sofa, nicely set out toilet tables, and, in short, everything that is luxurious....The house is small but very comfortable. On the first floor is a small drawing-room and dining room opening upon a deep piazza, as they call them here. From this piazza a few steps down to a delightful garden filled with all sorts of flowers in full bloom, and close to the piazza is an orange tree.... Having settled ourselves a little, we proceeded with Solomon [the Skirvings' driver] to see the Negro huts about five hundred yards from the house. They are twenty-nine in number, very neatly arranged. In each hut there are two apartments, one for sleeping in. Some of the huts had windows but very few, most of them having no light but what was admitted by the open door or an occasional separation between logs. In one of the largest were assembled all the children under the age of fourteen, whom they consider too young to work. They were under the charge of one woman who prepares their meals for them and takes care of them whilst their parents are at work in the fields. The children, as well as the men and women, are fed upon Indian corn which is served out to them at the beginning of each week... it makes one melancholy to see them, even at their best. There was no laughing or talking in the field, no sign whatever of merriment or happiness; they seemed to work on mechanically, aware that the slightest relaxation was watched by the driver and would be followed by the infliction of his cart whip. 82

The Halls visit to Nathaniel Heyward's Bluff Plantation (Site No. 551/569 0361) the following day also included a tour, led by Mr. Heyward himself. Mrs. Hall noted that "...his whole plantation is rice with the exception of the corn that he cultivates to feed his slaves upon."83 Her interest in the condition of the slaves continued, as she noted "...Mr. Heyward does not interfere with his slaves in any way further than is necessary for the good of his own interest....The masters have the power of life and death over them. If a slave were, for instance, to be caught on Mr. Heyward's plantation cutting our portmanteaus from the back of our carriage, his master would call together two magistrates and five freeholders, and if it were proved that he was guilty they would forthwith string him up to the nearest tree."84

In 1860 there were 31 planters who owned 100 or more slaves on St. Bartholomew's Parish plantations. As Chalmers Davidson states in his sociological study of the South Carolina planters of 1860, these were the "great planters," to whom "there were available a degree of leisure and a choice of activity not guaranteed to his less fortunate fellow farmer." The most prominent slave owner in St. Bartholomew's Parish in 1860 was Daniel Blake, who owned 527 slaves at his Combahee River plantation known as Board House or Blake Plantation.

The Combahee retained its position of dominance in 1860, but significant plantations were in operation elsewhere. Several major antebellum plantations were located on the islands of the southeastern portion of St. Bartholomew's Parish. These plantations were all named for the islands on which they were located: Bear Island Plantation (owned by John Raven Matthews, who had 250 slaves in 1860); Hutchinson's Island Plantation (owned by Mrs. Mary March or Marsh; this plantation was the scene of a Confederate attack during the Civil War; March had inherited the property from her first husband, Thomas Holland Hutchinson; she had 258 slaves in 1860); and Sampson's Island Plantation (owned by Colonel Ephraim Mikell Seabrook, who had 177 slaves in 1860).86 No historic buildings are known to survive from these plantations.

The 1915 United States Geological Survey (USGS) quadrangle "Edisto Island, South Carolina" indicates approximately two dozen buildings grouped in proximity on Hutchinson Island, but only a few remained in 1948 and all are apparently now gone. (See Maps 2 and 3) It is not certain, however, with which period the buildings indicated on the 1915 map are associated. Colonel Seabrook's name is still present on the current (1960) "Bennetts Point, SC" United States Geological Survey Quadrangle. A black settlement named Seabrook was established on Fenwick Island either late in the nineteenth century or early in the twentieth century; the Seabrook name appears on the 1915 and 1948 "Edisto Island" USGS guadrangles (See Maps 2 and 3) and the 1960 "Bennetts Point" USGS quadrangle, though no buildings are believed to survive today. Several unmarked black cemeteries are located on Fenwick Island, however.87 [Note: Early on in this project it was hoped that field work could be carried out on Fenwick and Hitchinson islands and other Colleton County islands in an effort to locate historic resources at these locations. This undertaking proved to be logistically impossible. Nevertheless, a reconnaissance boat trip was made up the Edisto River during Phase Three. Located during this trip was Matthews Canal (Site No. 536 1304), a structure used in rice production in the vicinity of Fenwick, between the Ashepoo and Edisto Rivers.1

Even though rice was its vital crop throughout the Antebellum period, Colleton District made considerable progress with other crops, most notably cotton, corn and rye. During the twenty year period from 1840 to 1860, for example, Colleton District jumped from 23rd to 18th in South Carolina cotton production (from 420,910 pounds to 3.9 million pounds), 22nd to 10th in corn production, and 24th to 9th in rye production (from 390 bushels to 3,270 bushels). Crops other than rice were grown almost exclusively in the northern two-thirds of St. Bartholomew's Parish, above the great rice plantations. For the most part, these were considerably smaller agricultural operations, many of 100 acres and less. Swampy conditions and poor roads made transportation difficult in this area, but once the Charleston and Augusta Railroad was in operation through the nearby towns of Summerville and Branchville (1832) it was not nearly as difficult to get crops to market.

Communications, Transportation and Community Development

During the period 1820 to 1860 eighteen post offices were opened throughout St. Bartholomew's Parish. (See Map 4) Although many were in operation for only short periods of time (less than five months in the case of the "Brick Branch" Post Office), it is the number of post offices established that is most significant. Most were located along the Charleston to Savannah road, running from the Salkehatchie Bridge to Jacksonboro Crossroads (the present-day route of US Highway 17A and State Secondary Route 41) and branching off to both Jacksonboro (present-day SC Highway 64) and Parker's Ferry. The communities of "Ashepoo Ferry" and Green Pond received post offices in 1843 and 1859, respectively, indicating that those areas were developing. None of the present-day towns north of Walterboro was in existence by 1860, however.90

Walterboro's initial growth was significant, as by 1832 it had a summer population of approximately 900 and a winter population of about 450. The town also boasted a courthouse, a jail, three churches (Episcopal, Methodist, and Presbyterian), a library, a market house, and male and female academies. During the Antebellum period Walterboro served as an important warm-weather retreat for many plantation owners and their families, but many of these people vacated the town during the winter months when the cool weather made life easier on the plantations. Streets were laid out in Walterboro in 1839. The town's population did not increase greatly during the 1840s and 1850s, however, and the Civil War and Reconstruction would lead to a period of decline.

At least two dozen buildings of Antebellum vintage are still standing in Walterboro, including the Colleton County Courthouse (Site No. 536 0001). Believed to have been designed by Robert Mills and constructed by J. & B. Lucas in 1820, the building is a fine example of Greek Revival architecture. Its brick exterior is stucco-faced to give the appearance of stone. Four large Doric columns and two square pilasters support a sizable portico. Two large wings were added to the original courthouse structure in 1939. The Walterboro Library Society Building (Site No. 536 0006), also dating from 1820, is a small gableroofed frame building with Federal styling. It has served as the center of literary activity in Colleton County since its construction and is presently the headquarters of the Colleton County Historical Society. The Old Colleton County Jail (Site No. 536 0003) was built in 1855 and is a rare example of Gothic Revival styling. It was designed by well-known Charleston architects Edward C. Jones and Francis D. Lee and resembles a fortified castle with a crenelated parapet roof-line, turret-like structures at either corner and a large tower above the main entrance. The building has been used as a county office building since 1937.

The Hickory Valley Historic District (Site No. 536 0002) contains several residential buildings predating the Civil War. One of the earliest is the Elmore-Henderson House (Site No. 536 0918.00), built by United States Senator E. H. Elmore c.1820. It features a raised brick foundation, a two-story verandah that wraps around two sides and a central entrance with semi-elliptical transom and sidelights. The Edward B. Fishburne House (Site No. 536 0913) is a small, c.1830 Federal-styled house built on a high brick foundation and featuring a five bay facade, central doorway, an elliptical fanlight and sidelights. Also in the Hickory Valley Historic District is the Paul House (Site No. 536 0916.00), which dates from 1847 and exhibits a Greek Revival portico. The property also includes a Servant's House (Site No. 536 0916.01) built c.1850.

The Walterboro Historic District (Site No. 536 0005) contains several houses constructed early in the nineteenth century. The Chaplin House (Site No. 536 0886), a Federal-styled house resting on a high brick foundation. It was built c.1820 by rice planter Dan Chaplin and while altered the original structure is still discernible. The Lucas House (Site No. 536 0873) is another early Walterboro house, dating from c.1830 and exhibiting Federal styling. The Glover-McLeod House (Site No. 536 0906.00) was built by prominent Walterboro and Charleston physician Dr. Henry Charles Glover. It is a two-story frame dwelling with a gable roof, exterior end chimneys and verandahs across the front and one side. The property also includes a Carriage House (Site No. 536 0906.01) and Servant's House (Site No. 536 0906.02).

In 1853 a proposal was made to establish a railroad between Charleston and Savannah. Construction began in 1857, and the Charleston and Savannah Railroad was put in operation in 1860. The rail line enters St. Bartholomew's Parish at Jacksonboro and passes through Ashepoo, Green Pond and Whitehall before leaving the parish at the Salkehatchie River. The line carried little freight prior to the Civil War.⁹²

Civil War and Reconstruction, 1860-1877

The War

Colleton County was affected by the Civil War both as an actual place of battle and as a result of fighting going on elsewhere. Planting and harvesting activities at the rice plantations were disrupted, in part due to transportation problems as well as to removal of some slaves to the sea islands, where they were protected by Union troops. A Confederate regulation required planters to remove their slaves from the plantations, and those belonging to Charles Heyward (son of Nathaniel Heyward) were taken to a family plantation in Richland County known as Goodwill, where they remained for more than three years.⁹³

The presence of several major rivers made Colleton County of strategic importance during the Civil War. The Ashepoo, Combahee and Edisto were all navigable up to the Charleston and Savannah Railroad, itself of vital importance to the Confederacy, and in 1863 the Union first discussed plans to utilize these rivers in an attempt to cut off communications in the South by destroying railroad bridges. Many of Colleton County's planters realized the danger they were in, and in November of 1863 Nathaniel Heyward wrote to General Beauregard in request of "a few effective guns" to be placed along the Ashepoo, Combahee and Chehaw rivers as a supplement to the few fortifications that already existed. It was determined, however, that the military lacked sufficient troops to man such additional guns.

Well prior to the date of Heyward's letter, war activities had occurred on and among the county's barrier and erosion remnant islands, particularly Otter (location of Fort Drayton), Fenwick and Hutchinson. In June of 1862, for example, a Confederate raid was directed from Chapman's Fort (Site No. 029/555 0558.00) on the Ashepoo River down to Mary March's (or Marsh's) Hutchinson Island Plantation, apparently in the belief that Union troops were still occupying the island. (The Union army had control of many of the sea islands during this time, offering projection to the slaves who continued to work the plantations even though the white owners had departed, many with their slaves. Other slaves were brought to the islands from other plantations, by union troops.) Accounts of the incident at Hutchinson Island differ as to the number of deaths and level of destruction, but at least ten black slaves were killed and several plantation buildings destroyed, possibly including the main plantation house and a chapel.95 [Note: Access to the former site of Hutchinson Island Plantation was not gained during this project. No buildings are shown on the current "Bennetts Point, South Carolina" USGS quad.]

In May of 1864 the Union army made serious plans to seize the Charleston and Savannah Railroad, with one column of troops sailing up the Edisto River and a second and much larger column intended to march northward from their landing at Bennett's Point (where Mosquito Creek joins the Ashepoo), basically along what is now State Secondary Road 26. The objective was to reach the railroad; the first column would destroy the railroad bridge at Jacksonboro while the second would destroy a railroad bridge over the Ashepoo. The campaign began on the 24th of May with the first column of men starting up the Edisto. On the night of the 25th several Union vessels began sailing up the Ashepoo, but for some reason two of them continued on past their Mosquito Creek destination. One of the vessels, the Lewis, actually sailed right past Chapman's Fort before the error became apparent; the second vessel, the Boston, was soon stuck in a mud bank. Only a few Confederate guards were present at Chapman's Fort, but they immediately left for assistance and by dawn had returned with a cavalry unit and light artillery. The Boston was soon under fire and was abandoned. A battle was fought for a time and the Union ships eventually withdrew, as did those on the Edisto.96

Most of Colleton County's plantation homes were destroyed during the Civil War, some by Union forces based at Port Royal during 1863 and 1864 and others by Sherman during his march from Savannah to Columbia in 1865. The lone remaining antebellum plantation house in the county is Beech Hill (Site No. 227/356 0269), which managed to survive despite the fact that the plantation was raided several times during the war. ⁹⁷ Slave cottages and meeting houses, such as the outstanding grouping at Oaks Plantation (Site No. 206 0406), were largely left intact, as it was apparently Union policy to destroy only the main plantation residences.

End of the Plantation Economy/Reconstruction

Agricultural production during the Civil War was minimal, and during the immediate post-war years Colleton County's agricultural foundation stagnated, as did agriculture in much of South Carolina. Without slave labor, the large rice plantations were unable to operate. The tenancy system that developed after the war could not be adapted to the particular labor requirements of rice, and as a result thousands of acres of rice fields stood idle.98

In 1870 nearly 91 percent of Colleton County farms (2,070 of 2,283) were under 100 acres in size. 99 This compares with a state-side average of 569 acres in 1860, and it is likely that Colleton County's average was even higher than the state average in 1860, since the Coastal Plain contained the largest average landholdings. 100 In 1870, however, the average farm size in Colleton County is estimated to have been somewhat under 75 acres. This figure is rather misleading, however, since each tenant-operated farm was included in the census as an individual farm unit. Tenants were not landowners and relatively few antebellum farms or plantations were actually broken up during the early postwar years. 101

In March of 1865 the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands was created to handle all issues related to the welfare of the nation's freed slaves. One area of particular importance was the schooling of blacks. In South Carolina, the Freedmen's Bureau (as the organization was commonly known) took on the responsibility of coordinating the work of benevolent groups that actually hired teachers and tended to the day-to-day operations of the black schools. The Bureau also paid for rental and maintenance of the school buildings. By November of 1865 there were approximately 48 black schools in operation in South Carolina with over 5,000 students enrolled. The Freedmen's Bureau continued its involvement in the education of blacks until the conclusion of the 1869-1870 school session, and it is estimated that between 20,000 and 30,000 black children received instruction during the five years of Bureau involvement. It is also estimated, however, that approximately 75 percent of the state's school-age blacks had received no instruction during this time.

Almost no recorded information has been located concerning the early educational efforts involving Colleton County's black residents. The Census of 1870 indicates that 167 blacks were attending school in Colleton County that year. 103 It is also known that several schools for black children were in operation by at least the late nineteenth century at plantations such as Blake and Bluff. (Schools at these two locations are indicated on the 1941 "General Highway and Transportation Map" of Colleton County as "Cherokee Sch" and "Heyward Sch" -- See Map 7.) The county's oldest standing black school building is believed to be the Ritter School (Site No. 227 451), but this structure is not thought to date from any earlier than about 1900. It was still in operation as recently as 1958. 104 Colleton County would also be the site of at least two (and probably several more) Rosenwald Schools. These schools were built throughout the south between 1914 and 1927 under a program sponsored by Chicago businessman Julius Rosenwald, who usually contributed about fifteen percent of the construction costs. The remaining expenses were usually raised locally, primarily within the black community. 105 It is known that such schools were built at Green Pond and Hendersonville. 106 [Note: A building (Site No. 437 0323) surveyed on State Secondary Route 198 approximately a tenth of a mile southeast of US Highway 17-A has the appearance of a Rosenwald School, but its status as such has not been confirmed.]

Possibly of even greater importance to blacks than education was the opportunity to own land. At the constitutional convention that assembled in January of 1868 the subject of distributing land to freedmen was debated, and on 27 March 1869 the South Carolina Land Commission was established. This body was to oversee a program under which the state would acquire land and sell it to blacks under long-term payment plans, the only such land redistribution plan in the south. 107 The program was riddled with corruption and controversy, however, and many blacks ended up losing their lands in the late-1870s and early-1880s when the Land Commission placed tighter controls on conditions of sales and payment provisions. 108

A total of 12,894.5 acres of land in Colleton County were acquired and distributed by the South Carolina Land Commission, the second highest total of all South Carolina counties. 109 Colleton was one of several counties in which blacks formed cooperatives of freedmen who worked for hire and paid dues according to the terms of the organizations. Accumulated money was used to purchase Land Commission property, which was divided among the membership; individuals could then use their land as they wished. 110 One Colleton County tract distributed under the program was that owned by William Henry Heyward, brother of Nathaniel Heyward. The property, mostly swampland described at the time as "better for fishing than farming" was purchased by a northern speculator named Phillip Schley for $10,000 in 1870, but the property was credited to the state at $24,000 -- this was typical of the way in which certain Land Commission officials and outside speculators

Ten blacks from Colleton served in the South Carolina Legislature during the period 1868-1877. One of these legislators was William A. Driffle of Walterboro, born in 1835, who had been a slave before the Civil War and was skilled as a carpenter. The Walterboro street "Driffle Lane" was named for William Driffle, but the name was later changed to Tracy Street. The following table includes all ten of Colleton County's black legislators from 1868 to 1877. (Question marks indicate the information is unavailable.)

Agricultural Changes and the Rise of Industrialism, 1877-1917

During the forty-year period from 1877 to 1917, Colleton County's agriculture-dependent economy went through some significant changes. Post-Civil War rice production for the entire state never reached a level even half that of the antebellum years, and the same was true for Colleton County. In 1860, 22.8 million pounds of rice had been produced in Colleton County (ranking it second in the state behind Georgetown County), but in 1880 the figure was only 11.1 million pounds (though Colleton County ranked first in the state). 11.3 million pounds were produced in Colleton County in 1900; considering that a portion of the county had been taken in 1897 to form Dorchester County, this 1900 level of production was probably Colleton's best of the post-Civil War Period (even though the Dorchester area was not a major rice-growing region). But by 1910 a decline had set in; 10.2 million pounds were produced that year, a 10 percent drop from 1900. Productivity fell by 79 percent between 1910 and 1920, as Colleton County produced only 2.2 million pounds of rice in 1920.

The decline in rice production was due to a combination of factors. A series of bad storms over a critical twenty-year period resulted in considerable destruction of the rice crop. The worst storms hit in 1893, 1898, 1910 and 1911 and greatly discouraged Colleton County's remaining rice planters; in particular, the severe back-to-back storms of 1910 and 1911 apparently prompted several planters to retire 117 Perhaps equally troubling was the fact that rice was being grown very successfully, and at less cost, in the "Old Southwest" states of Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi and even parts of Arkansas. 118 This region utilized techniques based on small-grain production technologies of midwestern states and achieved economies of scale in rice production that had become virtually impossible in the lowcountry. 119 Powerful pumps were introduced to carry water along elevated ridges and through arterial canal systems, simplifying the process of flooding and draining the rice fields. Unfortunately, these advancements in irrigation technology proved difficult to adapt to South Carolina, as lowcountry planters discovered they could not use the heavy machinery on their relatively poorly-drained fields. 120 Furthermore, rice growers in the southwestern states had developed improved rice breeds and milling techniques, adding to the advantages they held over southeastern plantation owners. 121

Compounding the difficulties for Colleton County's rice planters during the latenineteenth and early-twentieth centuries were yet additional reductions in the labor force, particularly after 1910. Recognizing that plantation labor continued to be carried out primarily by blacks, the drop in the county's black population between 1910 and 1930 is evidence of a declining labor supply. In 1910 Colleton County had a total population of 35,390 and a black population of 22,296, equal to 63.0 percent of the total. By 1920 the county's population had dropped to 29,897 and the black population was down to 17,366, equal to 58.1 percent of the total; thus, the county lost 5,493 residents between 1910 and 1920 and 4,930 -- or 89.8 percent -- of these people were black. Colleton County's population losses continued during the 1920s. By 1930 the county had a population of 25,821 and a black population of 14,063, equal to 53.5

percent of the total; 81.0 percent of the county's population loss between 1920 and 1930 was thus accounted for by the departure of blacks. 122

A good number of Colleton County's large plantation properties changed hands during the late-1800s and the first few decades of the twentieth century. Many of the rice fields had not been used for rice cultivation since before the Civil War. and, lying fallow with water control equipment not receiving needed maintenance, these fields began reverting to their former status as tidal marshes. Several plantations were purchased by wealthy northerners during this time and were developed as private hunting preserves. Some rice fields began to be restored in the effort to attract water fowl, and thus some of the former patterns of land management were revived and continue to this day. Since the main plantation houses had in all but one case been destroyed during the Civil War, new buildings began to be constructed; most date from the 1920s and 1930s. Other new features were added at many of the properties, including elements such as formal gardens, entrance drives and gateways. The new owners thus brought change to many of Colleton County's plantations, but many of these people also brought to the region a stewardship ethic that continues today. As a result, many of the large acreage plantation tracts have remained substantially intact and important biological systems are being sustained.

Developments at Blake Plantation (Site No. 569 0362.00), perhaps the most significant of the Colleton County rice plantations during the antebellum period, are illustrative of the process sometimes referred to as the "Second Yankee Invasion." This plantation property remained in the Blake family from the eighteenth century until 1931. In 1790 William Blake owned 695 slaves, the most of any Colleton County planter at that time. Although the main plantation residence at Blake was destroyed during the Civil War, a small antebellum dwelling of undetermined original use has survived. In 1931 the plantation was sold to William P. Coe, who changed its name to Cherokee and built a Neoclassical-styled main residence on the property. The plantation has had four owners since Coe sold the property in 1957, and the present owners recently planted rice on the property as part of their efforts to attract wildlife.

Poco Sabo Plantation (Site No. 206 0275.00) was established on part of the land granted to Edmund Bellinger, the first Landgrave of Colleton County. (The Bellinger Family Cemetery (Site No. 206 0275.01) is also on the property.) As with Blake Plantation, Poco Sabo has changed hands numerous times in the twentieth century. The present main residence on the property was designed by Albert Simmons of Charleston and built in 1934 for Silas Howland of New York. Howland died soon after completion of the house, and the property has had three owners since the mid-1930s. The property also includes an antebellum tabby building as well as guest cabins and a caretaker's house dating from the 1930s.

New Agricultural Developments

Although forestry had been a very significant component of the South Carolina economy since the colonial period, it took on even greater importance during the late-nineteenth century. The two most valuable trees in the state were the cypress and the long leaf pine, both of which thrive in Colleton County today as they did a century and more ago; as a result, Colleton played a major role in the growing lumber industry during the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries. Key to the development of the industry was a series of logging railroads constructed between the 1890s and the 1920s. 123

In 1892 the newly-chartered Hampton and Branchville Railroad and Lumber Company began construction of a logging railroad from Hampton toward Branchville. Company owner William Harrison Mauldin and his son, J. Mauldin, also established a branch of their main line that crossed the Salkehatchie River and entered Colleton County at Moselle (near where County Roads 25 and 38 intersect today). The line continued on in a northeasterly direction for about eight miles to what was then known as H & B Junction. This was the point at which the tracks of the Hampton and Branchville Railroad crossed the tracks of the Green Pond, Walterboro and Branchville Railway, which today is part of the Seaboard Coastline rail system. From H & B Junction the rail line continued to Smoaks and terminated several miles further east in Hell Hole Swamp. This line functioned as the primary logging railroad in northern Colleton County and was extended in the 1920s. 124

The Colleton County town of Wiggins developed early in the twentieth century after the Charleston Lumber Company built a large sawmill there in 1903. A portion of the mill building was three-and-one-half stories in height. The company operated a 17-mile-long line, running south from Green Pond to the new sawmill, from 1903 until it sold the operation to Westmoreland Lumber Company sometime prior to 1905. Sawn lumber was transported out of Wiggins by large ocean-going ships that had to be pulled up and down the Chehaw River by a steam-powered tug boat. A post office was opened in the town in 1905 and Westmoreland built a sizable community near the mill for its employees. Management-level workers were furnished with two-story houses while laborers were resided in one-story dwellings. A large, two-story hotel and commissary was also built and still stands today (Site No. 555 0566.05) 125 The 1915 United States Geological Survey map "Green Pond, South Carolina" (See Map 5) clearly illustrates that Wiggins was a substantial settlement composed of approximately 115 buildings at that time.

The Wiggins mill and the rail line were sold to Hilton Dodge Lumber Company in 1914 and to the Savannah River Lumber Company less than a year later. In 1916 the sawmill was totally destroyed but the Savannah River Company soon replaced it with a somewhat smaller facility. By 1917 the company had lengthened its rail operation to 43 miles, running from Wiggins to Green Pond,

White Hall and Hendersonville. The company also operated branch lines toward the Ashepoo River, Ashepoo Siding and from Fenwick (on the Seaboard Air Line Railroad) as far south as Fenwick Island. 126 (This rail line shows up on Map 2.)

Numerous other logging operations flourished in Colleton County early in the twentieth century. Founded in 1907, the Colleton Cypress Company operated a line along the Little Salkehatchie River that began at only five miles in length but by 1917 had been lengthened to fifteen miles. The company built a mill at a location then known as Colleton, about two miles west of the present-day town of Williams. Walterboro and a small community just south of Walterboro named Thayer were important in the logging operations of the Walterboro Lumber Company. The company mill was located at Thayer and rail lines were built to several locations, including Ritter and along the west bank of Chessey Creek. Perhaps the shortest logging railroad was that constructed by the Jacksonboro Lumber Company, which had three miles of track branching off the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad's main line and operated a mill in Jacksonboro. 127

Community Development

The period from 1877 to 1917 was one of significant growth for several Colleton County communities, most notably Walterboro. In 1870 Walterboro was still a rather small town for a county seat with a population of only 636, and by 1880 it had only grown by nine percent, to 691. In 1880 the community's commercial district was composed of thirteen stores and the town had eight churches. ¹²⁸ But Walterboro experienced tremendous growth during the 1880s, and by 1890 it boasted a population of 1,171, an increase of 70 percent from 1880. A serious storm struck Walterboro in April of 1879 and destroyed numerous buildings and many old trees, particularly in the Hickory Valley vicinity.

The Green Pond, Walterboro and Branchville Railroad became operational in 1887, providing a link between the Charleston and Savannah Railroad to the south (which passed through Jacksonboro and Green Pond) and the Charleston and Augusta Railroad to the north (which passed through Branchville). The Walterboro depot (Site No. 5360675) was constructed south of downtown at the end of Railroad Avenue (now Memorial Avenue), and as a result this thoroughfare became a fashionable street on which to live. Considerable growth continued during the last decade of the nineteenth century, as a 27 percent increase in the 1890s gave Walterboro a population of 1,491 by 1900. In 1905 Walterboro boasted several industries, including the Colleton Cotton Mills, Cummings Iron Works and Supply Company and the Walterboro Cotton Oil Company. 129 These businesses were all located in an industrial area that developed in Walterboro around the turn-of-the-century, in the vicinity of the passenger and freight depot south of the commercial district.

By the late 1910s, businesses added in the area included Standard Oil Company, the Walterboro Cotton Gin (part of the Walterboro Cotton Oil Company) and the Walterboro Ice and Fuel Company. Sometime prior to 1920 the Colleton Cotton Mills went out of business. 130 The town's growth slowed even more over the next ten years but remained significant, as Walterboro grew to a population of 1,677 by 1910.131

Throughout most of the twentieth century, Walterboro's black residents have lived primarily in the city's northeastern quadrant as well as near the industrial area in the vicinity of Moore Street south of downtown where employment could be found. The Walterboro public schools were segregated until the mid-1960s and prior to that time blacks attended an all-black elementary school (grades 1-6) and an all-black high school (grades 7-12).

Cottageville did not incorporate until the late-1920s, but the community had become established enough by 1878 that residents desired a post office. Up until that time the village had been known as Round O, which was a name associated with a large portion of eastern Colleton County. (Cottageville Methodist Church, for example, was originally Round O Methodist Chapel and continued to be known by that name until at least as late as the 1890s.) Also, another concentration of people in the Round-O area had already put in an application for a "Round-O" post office (Site No. 437 0149.02) at the site of present-day Round-O, so the name had been taken. It was decided, therefore, that a new name was needed, and "Cottageville" was selected by S. O. Ackerman, Dr. George Pierce and Captain B. G. Willis as being appropriate given the type of housing predominant in the community. The first Cottageville Post Office was opened in 1879. 132 Population figures for Cottageville are not provided until the Census of 1910, when the town had a total of 418 residents. 133

Depression, Recovery and the Second World War, 1917-1945

During the period from 1917 to 1945, Colleton County underwent several important agricultural and economic changes. The county's rice production dropped sharply during the 1910s, from 10.2 million pounds in 1910 to 2.1 million pounds in 1920. During the 1920s the cultivation of rice virtually stopped, as only 165,735 pounds were produced in 1930. Although the plantation system was long gone, this period truly marked the final chapter in the county's history of rice cultivation. The economic depression of the late-1910s, 1920s and 1930s is clearly reflected in the agricultural statistics for these decades. Corn, oat and sweet potato production dropped between 1910 and 1920, and by 1950 only corn showed a slightly higher level of production than in 1910. The number of farms in the county dropped by more than one-third between 1910 and 1950, from 4,546 to 2,944, and the amount of farmland also declined somewhat, from 471,013 acres to 411,011. The average farm size in Colleton County increased substantially, from 103.6 acres in 1910 to 139.6 acres in 1950.134

A sharp decline in farm tenancy occurred during the first half of the twentieth century. In 1920, for example, there were a total of 1,251 tenant farmers in Colleton County, and by 1950 there were only 665. The ratio of black tenants to white tenants remained virtually the same during this period, however. In 1920, 68.24 percent (997) of the tenant farmers were black, while in 1950 the figure had dropped slightly, to 62.26 percent (414). The ratio of black to white farm owners also remained very similar between 1920 and 1950. In 1920, 43.49 percent of the farm owners were black (1,089), while in 1950 the figure was 42.05% (950)¹³⁵

Industrial Expansion

The timber industry continued to develop and change between 1917 and 1945, primarily due to the depletion of forests in some areas and the desire to reach uncut timber elsewhere in the county. By 1940, 256 Colleton County residents were employed in logging activities and 525 Colleton County residents were employed at sawmills and planing mills. 136 The employment opportunities afforded by the timber industry during this period no doubt resulted in residential building construction in most sections of the county.

The Hampton and Branchville Railroad and Lumber Company was purchased in 1918 by Fred and Henry Lightsey, who, along with their father Jacob Lightsey, had been in the logging business in Hampton County since 1907. In 1924 the Lightseys extended the Hampton and Branchville (H & B) line from Smoaks to Canadys and on to Cottageville via Sidney and Hiotts. At this time there were major forests along the Edisto River that remained uncut, and the extension of the H & B line was an effort to reach these new timber sources. 137

In addition to its primary role in the transportation of lumber, the Hampton and Branchville Railroad provided scheduled passenger service between Canadys and Hampton. In 1934, for example, two passenger trains made the run from Hampton to Canadys and back daily; each one-way trip was 36 miles in length and took from 90 minutes to two hours. The H & B also provided occasional service to Cottageville, including picnic excursions. In 1960 the Hampton and Branchville abandoned its track east of H & B Junction, but today the line remains in operation as far as Canadys, where it delivers coal to the power plant there. ¹³⁸

The Savannah River Lumber Company closed the mill at Wiggins in 1924, apparently because by that year a substantial portion of the timber within convenient transporting distance of the mill had been cut. Sixteen thousand acres of land surrounding Wiggins were offered to Colleton County at $10.00 an acre, but the offer was turned down and some of the property was purchased by private individuals for development as a hunting preserve. Most of the buildings in Wiggins were subsequently put up for sale, at $5.00 per room, to anyone interested in moving them off the site. 139 (An example of one of the houses moved from the Wiggins community to another location in Colleton County is Site No. 555 0389.) Today Wiggins is within the boundaries of Chehaw Combahee Plantation (Site No. 555 0556). Several historic resources dating back to the early-twentieth century and the heyday of Wiggins remain at the site, including the Superintendent's House (.02); the Office (.03); the Wiggins Commissary Hotel (.05); a railroad siding structure (.07); and three houses (.04, .06, and .08).

Most of the former rights-of-way of Colleton County's logging railroads have either been abandoned or have had roadways constructed on them for use by automobiles. An example of the former is the line from Green Pond south to Wiggins, which has been removed. A portion of the rail line which used to run from the Seaboard Air Line Railroad south to Fenwick Island is now an unnamed paved road that terminates at its intersection with County Road 26 in the Bear Island Game Management Area.

During the 1920s several changes took place in Walterboro's industrial area south of downtown along the railroad. The Walterboro Cotton Oil Company and Cotton Gin went out of business and was replaced by the A. S. Sabin Lumber Mill, reflecting the decline of cotton in the region and the increased importance of the timber industry. A second lumber mill, owned by H. E. Savage, also went into business in the 1920s. The Texas Company replaced Standard Oil Company during this same period. 140

Community Development

Between 1910 and 1930 Colleton County lost more than a quarter of its population, dropping from 35,390 in 1910 to 25,821 in 1930. Two very small portions of the county had been annexed to Bamberg County in 1919 and 1920, certainly nowhere near enough land area to begin accounting for such a substantial population loss. The force behind this demographic change was a prolonged agricultural and economic depression through which Colleton County suffered during this period. By 1940, however, conditions had improved and the population had risen slightly, to 26,268, and it continued to rise slowly after that. Walterboro did not suffer as seriously as the rest of the county during the depressed times. By the 1920s it had become known as a "winter colony" among northerners and was attracting many visitors during the winter season. The county seat was thus able to capitalize on its position as the dominant city in Colleton County and fared better economically.

Modern Times, 1945 to the Present

Since the end of the Second World War Colleton County has experienced steady growth. The timber industry continues to be a major factor in the county's economy, but other industries have become established and are providing employment opportunities in many sections of the county. Transportation changes and improvements have also been important. The most significant of these has been the construction of Interstate 95, which crosses the county in an east-to-west alignment and passes just north of Walterboro. I-95 has brought opportunities for commercial and industrial growth, but its construction and related developments have resulted in the loss of some historic resources.

Perhaps the most important recent development in Colleton County having an impact on cultural as well as natural resources has been the ACE Basin project, named for the county's three major rivers, the Ashepoo, Combahee and Edisto and centered in the southern third of the county. The project began in 1988 as a partnership among private landowners, conservation organizations (The Nature Conservancy and Ducks Unlimited) and state and federal agencies (South Carolina Wildlife and Marine Resources Department and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service). The ACE Basin Task Force is made up of representatives of these agencies, groups and organizations and works to perpetuate the quality of habitats within the ACE Basin and sustain a diversity of natural systems and wildlife. Much of the land in the project area remains in private ownership, meaning that voluntary actions on the part of landowners -- such as conservation easements -- have been crucial to the success of the effort. Other tools utilized have included outright donations of land, fee-simple acquisition, and purchase and resale with added easements. The ACE Basin project has been very innovative and is viewed as one of the outstanding land protection efforts in the United States. 143 Its importance also extends to historic resources, since most of Colleton County's significant plantations are located within the boundaries of the project area. Although the ACE Basin project is technically not a historic preservation effort, it is serving many of the goals of historic preservation by forwarding a conservation ethic that is entirely compatible with the interests of preservationists. Finally, much of the history of Colleton County is associated with the land, and with people who formerly owned and toiled on that land; the ACE Basin project is making a positive contribution to protecting and preserving much that is important in the county's history.

Tables: The following tables categorize resources according to different analysis parameters. It is important to note that the term "resource" refers to any building, site, structure or object for which a survey card was completed. Survey cards were not completed for the majority of outbuildings encountered during field work, so, while these buildings are noted on the survey cards under Item 18, they will not be included in these tables.

13. DATA GAPS

There are no known data gaps remaining for the survey areas of Phases One, Two or Three with the exception of Laurel Springs Plantation, to which no access was granted.

14. COMPILED INVENTORY

The Compiled Site Inventory is a complete list of all surveyed properties arranged by USGS quadrangle map; it provides the following information for each resource: a) name, if known; b) date of construction; c) property type; and d) location. The Compiled Site Inventory has been attached to the survey report as Appendix 1.

15. RECOMMENDATIONS

Preservation Planning

- Establish a county-wide Certified Local Government (CLG) program to promote and protect the historic resources of Colleton County including the designation of local historic properties and districts. Some of the community planning activities that could be initiated through the CLG program include:
- Develop published design guidelines for use by historic preservation commission in review of new construction and alterations to locally designated properties and districts.
- Prepare a county-wide historic preservation plan for the protection of historic resources.
- Incorporate findings of the survey into on-going planning and development programs within the city and county. Create systems that will allow the further identification of cultural resources as part of pre-design activities for proposed developments and will result in the preservation of these resources.

Additional Research and Documentation

- Prepare a Multiple Property Nomination to the National Register focusing on the following contexts: (1) antebellum plantation system and rice culture, (2) agricultural history of the county, (3) community development, (4) African-American history - slave resources and post-Civil War community development, (5) timber industry.
- Conduct an intensive archeological survey along the Ashepoo, Combahee, and Edisto rivers and the coastal islands. Focus on the rice culture, potential African-American communities, and Civil-War related resources.
- Review existing inventories of Colleton County cemeteries and update based on survey findings. Assess need for a comprehensive inventory of cemeteries.
- Conduct one or more oral history projects; possible subjects include African-American History of Colleton County, Local Builders and Carpenters of Colleton County, or the Forgotten History of Northern Colleton County.

Heritage Tourism/Public Education

- Using the survey as a basis, develop a system of driving tours (Heritage or Discovery Trails) throughout the county. Can develop tours based on location or themes. For instance, tours can focus on various areas throughout the county with concentrations of resources, or tours can showcase types of resources, such as cemeteries, churches, farmsteads, and plantations.
- Develop a system of walking tours for the City of Walterboro.
- Produce an educational video on the historic resources of Colleton County for use by schools, civic groups, and for the purpose of community promotion.
- Consider developing a series of educational materials specifically for use in schools. Work with history, art, English, social studies, and science teachers to develop various programs that use architecture and history as a basis for learning. Possible themes might be: architectural styles and types, rice culture, African-American history, geography, etc.

List of Properties Eligible for the National Register and the National Register Criteria and Areas of Significance

South Carolina Department of Archives and History

COLLETON COUNTY SURVEY
NATIONAL REGISTER EVALUATION: PHASES I-III

PROPERTIES DETERMINED ELIGIBLE FOR LISTING IN THE NATIONAL REGISTER OF HISTORIC PLACES

The following determinations are based on evaluations of the Colleton County Survey (Phases I - III) by the State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO) of the S.C. Department of Archives and History. It is the opinion of the SHPO that the properties meet, with the exception of those found worthy of further investigation, the eligibility criteria for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places. These determinations are based on the present architectural integrity and available historical information for the properties included in the Colleton County Survey. Properties may be removed from or added to this list if changes are made that affect a property's physical integrity. Historical information that is brought to the attention of the National Register specialist confirming or denying a property's historic significance may also affect a property's eligibility The process of identifying and evaluating historic properties is never complete. The SHPO encourages readers of this report to alert the National Register specialist to properties that may have been omitted during this evaluation.

National Register field evaluations were conducted by SHPO staff Andrew W. Chandler, H. Thomas Shaw, J. Tracy Power, Ian Hill and Mary Parramore in October 1993 (Phase I); by Andrew W. Chandler, Ian Hill and Mary Parramore in June 1994 (Phase II); and by Andrew W. Chandler and Jenny Dilworth in May 1995 (Phase III).

PROPERTIES ELIGIBLE FOR INDIVIDUAL LISTING IN THE NATIONAL REGISTER

The SHPO considers the following properties to be eligible for individual listing in the National Register of Historic Places. The Colleton County Survey site number and the historic or common name, if known, are given along with the National Register Criteria for Evaluation (Criterion A, B, or C) and/or Criteria Considerations (abbreviated "CC") under which the property qualifies.

THE NATIONAL REGISTER CRITERIA FOR EVALUATION

CRITERIA FOR EVALUATION

The quality of significance in American history, architecture, archeology, engineering, and culture is present in districts, sites, buildings, structures, and objects that possess integrity of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association, and:

- That are associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history; or
- That are associated with the lives of persons significant in our past; or
- That embody the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction, or that represent the work of a master, or that possess high artistic values, or that represent a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction; or
- That have yielded, or may be likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history.

CRITERIA CONSIDERATIONS

Ordinarily cemeteries, birthplaces, or graves of historical figures, properties owned by religious institutions or used for religious purposes, structures that have been moved from their original locations, reconstructed historic buildings, properties primarily commemorative in nature, and properties that have achieved significance within the past 50 years shall not be considered eligible for the National Register. However, such properties will qualify if they are integral parts of districts that do meet the criteria or if they fall within the following categories:

- A religious property deriving primary significance from architectural or artistic distinction or historical importance; or
- A building or structure removed from its original location but which is significant primarily for architectural value, or which is the surviving structure most importantly associated with a historic person or event; or

- A birthplace or grave of a historical figure of outstanding importance if there is no appropriate site or building directly associated with his productive life; or
- A cemetery which derives its primary significance from graves of persons of transcendent importance, from age, from distinctive design features, or from association with historic events; or
- A reconstructed building when accurately executed in a suitable environment and presented in a dignified manner as part of a restoration master plan, and when no other building or structure with the same association has survived; or
- A property primarily commemorative in intent if design, age, tradition, or symbolic value has invested it with its own exceptional significance; or
- A property achieving significance within the past 50 years if it is of exceptional importance.

³The Criteria for Evaluation are found in the Code of Federal Regulations, Title 36, Part 60, and are reprinted here in full.

SOUTH CAROLINA DEPARTMENT OF ARCHIVES & HISTORY

STATE HISTORIC PRESERVATION OFFICE (SHPO)

How to nominate a South Carolina property to the National Register of Historic Places

Nominations to the National Register of Historic Places can be pursued either by the owner of a property or by anyone else who is an interested party. All nominations undergo scrutiny in a process that begins with a preliminary review by the State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO), continues with a review by the South Carolina State Board of Review, and ends with a review by the National Register Office of the National Park Service. For those of you interested in the nominating process, the procedures are outlined below.

As a first step, you should request a Preliminary Information Form (PIF) by writing or calling the National Register office of the State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO) at:

> The South Carolina Department of Archives and History P.O. Box 11669 Columbia, South Carolina 29211 803/734-8610

You should complete the PIF and return it to the above address along with the required historical documentation, black and white photographs, and location map.

The process will begin when the SHPO reviews the information and makes a recommendation on the property's potential for listing in the National Register. This preliminary review is not binding. It merely facilitates requests and discourages the investment of time and money in properties that fall short of the federal criteria.

Following the preliminary review, the SHPO will notify you of its recommendation. If the recommendation is negative, the SHPO will discourage you from continuing the process. If the recommendation is positive, the SHPO will encourage you to pursue a formal National Register nomination. You can prepare the nomination yourself, or you can hire a professional historic preservation consultant to do it for you. Because the SHPO has limited time and staff, it prepares few in-house nominations.

If you are preparing a nomination for the Review Board, the SHPO's National Register staff will give you instructions, forms, and guidance. To ensure that your nomination meets the strict standards required by the National Park Service, you should submit a draft to the National Register office at least fifteen weeks before the review date. The staff will examine it and return it to you with suggested revisions. You must revise your draft and return your nomination in final form to the National Register office at least five weeks before the Review Board meeting. The Review Board is made up of historians, architectural historians, architects, archaeologists, and other citizens interested in historic preservation. It holds public meetings three times a year.

The SHPO will send you an official notification of intent if you are the owner of a property that South Carolina's State Board of Review will be considering for nomination. As the owner, you will have the opportunity to comment on the proposed action, either by supporting the nomination or by submitting an objection to the SHPO. If you wish to object, you must do so in a notarized letter that certifies both your ownership of the property and your objection to the nomination.

The SHPO staff presents the National Register nominations to the Review Board at its public meetings. Nominations that the Board approves are revised by the SHPO staff, if necessary, then signed by the Deputy State Historic Preservation Officer and forwarded to the National Park Service in Washington. The National Register Office of the Park Service reviews the nominations and must approve or reject them for listing in the National Register within forty-five days.

When the National Park Service approves a nomination, the nominated property is usually listed in the National Register. If an owner (or one of a majority of owners if the property is a historic district), has objected to the nomination, the property will be approved for listing but not entered in the National Register. The Park Service will notify the SHPO of its action on the nomination, and the SHPO will then relay the information to you. If you wish, you may, as an owner or other interested party, purchase a bronze plaque and a certificate designating the nominated property as a National Register listing.
